

Factfulness: the single perspective instinct

We find pleasure in simple ideas;
a single solution for all our problems.

e.g. the simple idea of a free market is our solution to the problem of government interference

Thinking this way can lead you to forgetting about progress that has been made, stating the progress can energize people!

Do not limit your world view

Look at problems from different angles to help you get a more accurate understanding and find practical solutions

Being smart is not a shortcut to global factual knowledge, even experts are only experts within their field

Grab your toolbox instead of using the same tool.

I definitely get in the mindset of a single perspective instinct. Sometimes looking from afar and being humble can teach you more than actively trying to argue a single point.
